

SKYLAB CRASHES

NASA does not know exactly what day Skylab will re-enter Earth's atmosphere and crash "someplace"; but the latest estimate is between July 10 and 16. Skylab Mission Controllers at the Johnson Space Center are doing everything possible in preparation for a last-minute adjustment of the re-entry pattern. This will enable, hopefully, for Skylab to crash into the best possible location with a minimum of damage to property. There will be no minimum damage to Skylab.... it will be total damage. What does not burn up on re-entering Earth's atmosphere, will be broken into chunks from sizes of large rocks to a large boulder.

The whole world will be watching this event and the Space City Cover Society will have covers serviced for the collector for this extraordinary space spectacular! On the day of re-entry, covers will be cancelled at Cape Canaveral, the launch site of the Skylab space station. That same day covers will be cancelled at Houston, where the Skylab Mission Control is located. At Houston we will have both a cover with machine cancel and another cover with the hand mailer's postmark cancel. Each of these three will be 80¢ each.

Then, for that really special cover, we will have a limited number of double cancel covers. We will take what few we have of our May 14, 1973 covers (this was launch date of the Skylab space station), apply a 15¢ stamp to it and have it cancelled on the re-entry date. We will have two different double cancel covers for this event. One will be May 14, 1973 Houston cancel and re-entry date cancel; the other cover will be Cape Canaveral launch date May 14, 1973 and Cape Canaveral re-entry date cancel. Either the Houston or Cape Canaveral double cancel covers Will be $2.50
